

Born and raised in the small farming town of Bethalto, Illinois well before the shadow of the Gateway Arch stretched east into Illinois at sunset, Dwight Cox was one of four brothers. Beyond their parents, the four Cox boys all shared the letter 'D' as the first letter of their given names. Growing up in a small farm town taught Dwight how to work hard from a very young age. He still remains true to his Midwestern work ethics.

After graduating from high school, Dwight fulfilled his obligation to Uncle Sam and served his time in the United States Army. He is proud to call himself a veteran. Following his military service, he attended Bellville Area College and earned his Associates Degree in Aviation Maintenance Engineering. With a degree in one hand and his A&P license in the other, Dwight was ready to enter the aviation industry.

Putting his degree to work, Dwight joined Rockwell International as a technician in 1981 and worked his way through the ranks. When he left 16 years later to purchase Pueblo Airmotive as a managing partner of Cox, Kraay & Associates, he was the Director of Marketing for Latin America. All of these experiences have helped to shape Dwight into the effective General Manager he is today.

In his spare time, Dwight loves spending time with his family. He still enjoys keeping the young mechanic in him alive working on a custom motorcycle that he is building from the ground up. This is the second custom bike that Dwight has built. "The motorcycle experience keeps my hands dirty and my mind fresh," he says with a twinkle in his eye.

Dwight resides in Tucson Arizona with his wife Leticia and his two daughters, Tara and Kaitlyn. He is the proud grandfather of two granddaughters, and Tara and her husband Dax are expecting their third child this summer. Dwight and Letty have been married for nearly 20 years and thoroughly enjoy living in Arizona.
